

ABOUT US

Vision

Children grow up free from abuse

Mission

Ensure that the voices of children are heard and understood in cases of alleged abuse

Child First Doctrine

The child is our first priority

Not the needs of the family
Not the child's "story"
Not the evidence
Not the needs of the courts

Leadership Message

I sometimes struggle with the mixed messages in our culture about how we value children. We describe them as our future, our most precious loves and yet we turn our backs on abuse and exploitation. We adore sweet photos of innocent little ones and yet support budget cuts which will assure lack of resources for those who live in unsafe situations.

If you are reading this newsletter, you are one of thousands of dedicated supporters working to assure that children are safe from abuse. At CornerHouse, we work diligently to assure that the environment is warm and welcoming to children and adolescents who are coming here because there is reason to be concerned about their safety. For more than 21 years, we've been here for them. We are proud to be able to offer this service and strive each day to improve the quality of our practice.

But that's not enough. We need to work together as a community to prevent child abuse. The elimination of the exploitation and abuse of children is the vision for a real future for our children.

During the month of April, Child Abuse Awareness Month is taking place throughout the country. CornerHouse has the good fortune of dedicated volunteer supporters who have developed a series of efforts to raise awareness. I hope that you can participate in some way. Details are available on our FaceBook page as well as our website. Add a pinwheel to our garden which will delight every child who arrives at our doorstep. Put a Blue Kid on your lawn or in front of your business. Host a Pinwheel House Party to tell your neighbors about CornerHouse and child abuse.

These are tiny steps and essential for those of us who believe that children must be safe. Thank

From the Back of the House

There are many people who work diligently in the background to serve the children and teens that come to CornerHouse to be helped, supported, and heard. This series will keep you posted on the transitions in the "back of the house" as they occur:

Volunteers:

We've been fortunate to add more members to our Family Services volunteer team! Please help us welcome: Amanda, Nicole, Jordan & Lindsey.

CornerHouse is also delighted to welcome the following new members to the governing body:

Kevin Fossum – Pinnacle Properties

Chief Mike Reynolds – City of Hopkins

Chris Staley – Horizontal Integration

you for joining us in living the value of the "village"-- sharing in the care of its most vulnerable citizens.

Sincerely,

Patricia Harmon
Executive Director

April 4th was such a fun day at CornerHouse! We had many guests enjoy tours of CornerHouse, chat with our staff and plant pinwheels in our garden!!! If you missed out on the fun, our next Open CornerHouse is on Wed, April 18 from 4 to 6 PM. We hope to welcome you then! If you are unable to attend, visit our website to purchase a pinwheel or Blue Kid to celebrate Child Abuse Awareness Month!

Transitions

We bid a fond farewell to Sonya Steven as she leaves the Hennepin County Attorney's Office to enter retirement. Sonya has been a fixture at CornerHouse for several years, and we will really miss her humor and sharp intellect. We will be excited to hear about all of Sonya's new adventures. We are also excited to welcome Grace Song from the Hennepin County Attorney's Office to our multi-disciplinary team! She will be part of a three-person rotating team of attorneys, serving regular shifts at CornerHouse.

Tell Me Everything

CornerHouse has always integrated research findings into our interviewing practices. In fact, the CornerHouse Forensic Interview Protocol is unique in that it is based on best practices

Volunteer Needs

We need volunteers for the following positions:

- Family Service
- Administration

Please contact Rut if you or someone you know is interested in volunteering!

Volunteer Spotlight

Mike Ferber, Training Assistant

Mike started at CornerHouse in September of 2011. He has been helping every Friday morning since then entering data, assembling manuals, mastering the copy machine, picking up and delivering pizza, assembling pin wheels and more. He loves that we have a steady supply of coffee and bubble gum for him!

Mike applied for the position because he knew the Volunteer Coordinator and he supports the mission of CornerHouse, but he was also eager to help out in an office setting. Mike owns his own consulting business, helping small and medium Non-Profits with their fundraising efforts. Since he works out of a home office setting, he wanted to make derived from both rigorous research and interviewer experiences. Recent research has shown that more accurate statements come from spontaneous, free-flowing narrative and that when people are encouraged to practice providing this narrative in the “rapport” stage, they provide more details later in the interview process.

A forensic interview is a unique interaction, unlike any other conversation between an adult and a child. Unlike a teacher, parent or other authority figure, a forensic interviewer does not know the answers to the questions being asked. The child is the expert in the interview room. Because a child may arrive for a forensic interview with some anxiety, it helps to provide an opportunity to practice a forensic conversation about a non-forensic topic during the “rapport” stage of the interview. Ideally, the interviewer will ask open-ended questions about a neutral topic that the child has mentioned, eliciting details from both script memory (things that happen all the time, such as school) and episodic memory (unique events such as yesterday’s basketball game) (Cordisco-Steele, 2010). When more direct prompts are necessary for clarification, the interviewer will return to open-ended questions as soon as possible.

Practicing this kind of conversation early in the interview helps lay the groundwork for more successful inquiry about the substantive topic of conversation. Sternberg et al. (1997) found that building rapport by using open-ended questions about both the child’s everyday life and a recent event helped interviewers later draw out more abuse-relevant information. Interviewers are able to use the same types of questions in both the “rapport” and “abuse scenario” stages of the interview, thereby maximizing the child’s comfort and competence.

Older children and adolescents are developmentally able to provide more extended narrative in response to open-ended questions. However, even very young children can provide significant details about their experiences when questioned in an open-ended and developmentally-appropriate manner (Lamb et al., 2003).

CornerHouse has begun to integrate “narrative practice” into every interview as we build rapport, as a strategy to help clients provide the most comprehensive and spontaneous information possible. Wendy Anderson, a doctoral student in social work, is currently conducting research on our implementation of narrative practice at CornerHouse. We are excited to learn about the impact of narrative practice on disclosures among CornerHouse clients, thereby advancing the field and contributing to the development of best practices.

sure he immerses himself into a busy office environment once in a while to keep his computer skills sharp and to enjoy the office atmosphere.

Working with Sandy in the Training Department, filling a need of that growing part of CornerHouse, gives Mike a sense of helping a growing organization and purpose.

Being useful is something Mike seems to feed on. He is involved many, many non-profits – helping and volunteering somehow:

Eagan's July 4th Funfest Committee
 AFAA Walk Committee
 Thrivent Financial NDC Chapter Board
 Eagan Yellow Ribbon Committee
 Ambassador for the Dakota County Regional Chamber
 Can Do Canines Puppy Raiser and Foster
 Miata Club member

He is also an avid runner with the "Don't forget to breathe" running club and a passionate Facebook user!

We are so glad he has found the time and passion to help us at CornerHouse!!!
